

Harvest Your Hidden Artistry

Finding Your Voice in Your Work

A New Program for Leaders!

A Special Success Salon with Poet, Author, Speaker
Libby Wagner

Part Performance. Part Conversation. All Inspiration.

Business leaders are on the edge of a particular and exciting frontier—a time for harvesting your most creative approaches to your work, your life and your sense of wholeheartedness in the world.

The purpose of our day together is to inspire you to find and use your own voice, which . . .

- contributes to your success
- allows you to tap into greater resources for creativity
- supports a life of artistry and integrity

We will explore these important questions:

- How do you find and claim your voice?
- How do you use your voice in your work and in your world?
- What language is the best language for you?
- Why does your own artistry matter in your innovative, creative approach to your own work?
- Why does your business need your creative genius and how can it support you to the benefit of all?

This is no ordinary workshop or seminar. Are you ready for something extraordinary? Something completely different that allows you to dive into your work in a completely refreshed, energized and different way?

Click here for a Special Message from
Libby Wagner

Praise

Libby might not make a poet out of you, but she will make an artist out of you in terms of creating the messages and communication and general influence you seek. She helps people to realize their own potential as communicators and she does this with an artistry that would make Picasso or Beethoven envious because she is like them in her genius!

Alan Weiss

author, Million Dollar Consulting

Having recently having collaborated with Libby, I feel the work she is now embarking on is sure to create a beautiful understanding of the way the power of the arts can transform individual and organizational life.

David Whyte,

International poet & author of The Three Marriages and The Heart Aroused

Libby Wagner

Quoted in the New York Times and the Harvard Business Review, Libby Wagner, poet, author and speaker, is one of the only former poetry professors warmly invited into the boardroom. Using her unique approach, programs and seminars, Libby empowers those with whom she works to clearly articulate what they want, why they want it, and how to ask for it, creating the poetic difference.

Driven to help individuals and organizations move to their Creative Edge, Libby helps others not only to find their voices, but also to stand solidly and confidently in them to create the work and lives they love.

This is no ordinary conversation we are having—whether it’s the internal conversation you need to have with yourself, the connection you want to make with your loved ones, or especially the influence you’d like to stimulate among colleagues and clientele, the time for extraordinary language is now.

We are all poetry people because we are makers and creators of language. We are the harbingers of expression, and no matter our role, place, job or country, we are longing to be understood. Language is that net we throw out across the great space between us, and like other art forms—music, visual arts, dance, theater, etc.—poetry’s aim is to say the unsayable and draw someone closer as we are connected.